Saw an advertisement by the Chevron Oil Company that took me by surprise... they said that "the era of easy oil is over" and called upon the readers to join in on the discussions on energy conservation, alternatives to fossil fuels, and energy policies, among other things. They've set up a web site for these discussions at willyoujoinus.com.

A very nice idea, but rather than just talk about what we're going to do, the Sacramento BioFuels Network is already doing something about it. We're already providing the means for ordinary folks like you to make your own fuel from renewable sources, which can be made completely independent of any fossil fuel resources. There's certainly nothing wrong with talking about it, but don't you want to also DO something about it too? If you haven't already, please join us to find out how!
